[Effect of human recombinant interferon-alpha on the human T-cell leukemia virus type I (HTLV-I) in vitro]. To evaluate the effect of human recombinant interferon-alpha (rIFN-alpha) in vitro, the intracellular level of HTLV-I proteins p19, p24, gp46, and p62 as well as the viral production in MT-2 cells were studied after incubation with rIFN-alpha. The HTLV-I proteins p19 and gp46 were reduced remarkably after incubation with rIFN-alpha for three days, but the proteins p24 and p62 were not. HTLV-I gp46 was also reduced in the MT-2 cells continuously treated with rIFN-alpha for three days. The viral production in MT-2 cells incubated with rIFN-alpha for three days was also reduced.

Effects of neuronal nitric oxide synthase (nNOS) inhibition on whole-body ethanol metabolism, ethanol-induced activation of the stress system, and ethanol-induced impairments of learning and memory. The involvement of the stress system and the effects of ethanol on nitric oxide (NO) production in the brain have been shown. However, the role of NO in the effect of ethanol on learning and memory is not clear yet. The effects of the non-selective (NG-nitro-L-arginine methyl ester
